Member's Wing

by Robert Boyd

Project Gemini—is alive and well in Newark. This month we have a double header. Chapter members Chris Anderson and Paul Fincato have teamed up to form “Project Gemini”. I had a great time getting to know these two guys and talking about their projects.

Chris and Paul have been friends since they were kids. One day Paul looked at Chris and said, “I want to build an airplane”. Chris, a pilot with experience home building, who had owned several planes over the years, gave the only logical response, “OK”. So Project Gemini was formed.

Chris and Paul are each scratch building KR Super 2's from plans using mostly composite construction. Their decision to build together stemmed from the philosophy that together, they could work through the challenges and keep each other motivated. They really seem to have it together—they are very organized, from the composite work down to the project documentation. They have about two years in the projects and are around 60% complete.

When it comes time for the power plants, Chris is leaning towards the Continental O-200 while Paul is considering the Jabiru 3300. Now this is just my opinion and I may be wrong, but, as Paul was saying Jabiru, I could have sworn his eyes were saying, 12-cylinder Rolls.

Chris has been married to his wife, Debbie, for seven years and they have three children, Alex, Austin and Ashley. Chris holds a Private Pilot rating and has owned several aircraft over the years.

He also has experience with home building.

Paul and his wife Toni have been married for five years and have two children, Crystal and Trisha. Paul is currently a student working toward his Private Pilot rating.

Both Chris and Paul developed an interest in flying at an early age. Chris's father and grandfather loved flying and building and flying models. Paul also grew up building and flying models and enjoyed being around flyers.

Chris was flying his Cessna 150 with Paul over a field where his father and others were flying models. Chris's father pointed to the sky and with fatherly pride announced, "That's my son up there. He's a pilot and owns his own airplane." At that moment a roll of toilet paper came streaming out a window of the 150. His father just lowered and shook his head.

One of Paul's most exciting memories was his first solo. He recalls thinking, WOW, I'm the only person who can bring this thing down and land it in one piece. And he did, and very well. Paul also talked about an event that raised his heart rate while flying with a friend. The friend aborted a take off and screamed off the end of the runway. No injuries or damage occurred but the thought of what could have happened was enough to raise anyone's heart rate.

Chris described one of his best memories and one of his heart racing ones. Once with an instructor flying during low cover, the instructor climbed and broke through the clouds into blue sky and bright sunlight. Chris said it was a breathtaking experience for him. He went on to describe an event that happened to him in one of his planes, kept at Mt Vernon. Right after take off he noticed the lack of a server control. He was forced to circle using only rudder and landed using only trim. He discovered that a wire feeding the intercom had come loose and tangled around a bolt on the controls, causing the control loss.

Chris loves flying and working on the project. He also loves photography. He used to do wedding photography and still travels with a camera.

Paul is a jack of all trades but is an expert with electronics and computers. He also loves flying and working on the project.

Paul and Chris invite us to check out their web site and watch the progress of "Project Gemini" at www.krsuper2builders.com.

If you get a chance drop in and check them out. For all of you home builders, let them know who you are and what you are working on. They would love to know our chapter's builders and projects.

I wish I could have spent more time talking with these guys—I could learn a lot about aviation and home building. One thing's for sure; just hanging out with these two would be a lot of fun.

Fly-Out Report

Fly-out January 15th was scheduled to go to Portsmouth (PMH) for breakfast but weather caused the mission to be scrubbed. Several members gathered at the local Bob Evans as an alternative.

Fly-out February 6th is scheduled to Urbana-Grimes (I74) and February 17th to Coshocton (I40) for lunch at the Warehouse restaurant in Roscoe Village. Watch for details in the newsletter and by email announcements.

Rollie asked if there might be any interest in an overnight fly out. The subject will be discussed further at a future meeting.

50/50 drawing was won by Rollie Bailey. Rollie donated his winnings to the treasury.
